Jinnah’s Typewriter

By Shadab Zeest Hashmi

Your typewriter has been found in a tangle of seaweed clacking over the waves of the Arabian Sea in sand-grit staccato for sixty odd years churning the same speech first in the key of partition trains rattling with the dead

then the massacre of ’71 the “hunter-killer”
MQ-nines

The sea smooth as carbon paper clones a speech with every wave: Unity, Faith, Discipline

What was spilled came back as hardened coral:

Each time a still-birth

Your typewriter keeps time with the beggar-women sobbing
by the shore
